

Expanding Community Health Centers: An Area of Bipartisan Agreement

Information to Aid Effectiveness

*A White Paper from the Consistent Life Network
Fourth version: Updated January 10, 2025, for the 119th Congress*

Introduction

While debates about aspects of health reform have raged for years and are likely to continue to do so for years to come, the robust operation of Federally-Qualified Community Health Centers (CHCs) is one aspect that both Democrats and Republicans do agree on. Given the close partisan alignment of the 119th United States Congress, finding such areas of agreement will be especially crucial for legislative achievements.

Of the many methods for finding the areas of greatest need, we offer the criterion of specific health centers that offer very limited services and have no CHCs within five miles. Since the CHCs usually offer far more comprehensive services, this is a method for identifying underserved areas.

For many Republicans, this will have the additional selling point that the specific health centers we list are operated by Planned Parenthood, adding more substance to the need to ensure that such areas become no longer medically under-served; they would prefer that services come from the CHCs instead, in the knowledge that CHCs usually offer a wider range of services.

Many Democrats will find it useful that there is this extra selling point for many Republicans, making it much easier to pass any funding bills for creation of new CHCs for more comprehensive medical coverage in these along with other areas.

Planned Parenthood has under 600 locations in the U.S. Of those, 42 have no CHC within 5 miles.

Below we list each of these 42 centers and how close the nearest CHC is to it. We have also done a web search for possible affordable and/or gynecological health facilities for two reasons:

- 1) These may be suitable for providing the needed medical care, so that the area is in fact not underserved, but they have not gone through the process of establishing themselves as CHCs;
- 2) If they are apprised of the advantages and extra resources available for becoming federally qualified CHCs, this may be the speediest method of expanding health care access in that area.

The list started with all PP centers that have no CHC within 5 miles; the PP center was removed from the list when we found a Rural Health Clinic located within five miles.

There are, of course, many additional criteria that can be used to ascertain areas most in need of new CHCs. This information is intended to aid in strengthening a bill to expand access. That bill will include information from many other sources as well.

Sources

Note: The Consistent Life Network is a non-profit, non-partisan, non-sectarian organization with no formal or informal association with Planned Parenthood of America or any of its centers, nor with any Community Health Center. All information was obtained through publicly-available records on the World Wide Web.

Planned Parenthood

Information on Planned Parenthood health centers was found on PP's official website, <https://www.plannedparenthood.org/health-center/>. The list for each state can be found by adding the two-letter postal abbreviation for that state to the end of this URL. This provides a list of links to each center, which has its own web page with pertinent information.

Federally-Qualified Community Health Centers

Information on Community Health Centers was found at the Health Resources and Services Administration Data Warehouse "Find a Health Center" site at <https://findahealthcenter.hrsa.gov/>. The page has a feature allowing entry of any address, which then provides information on all CHCs within five miles; this is the reason the five-mile radius was selected as the criterion for distance. When there are none within five miles, the federal page will show CHCs farther away. We entered the address of each PP center in the United States and in most cases found several nearby CHCs.

Other Affordable Clinics

A Google web search was conducted, including private clinics and state and county administered clinics. When these are found within five miles, they are included. However, there is no independent assessment, outside of their own websites, to ascertain their suitability for medical services.
